Attitude is not peripheral. It's not putting on a happy face. It's a fundamental core reflecting our personality and character.

It is an inaccurate assumption to believe some people are always positive, because they are just built that way or their lives are easy. Positive or negative attitudes are not in our DNA; no one is born with it. While impacted by familial and environmental influences, our life choices can implode or strengthen our commitment to a positive attitude.

Course Description: Managing your attitude in the workplace is as critical as managing your workload. Attitude impacts organizational communication at every level every day. It packages our perceptions of others and events. It reveals our personal autonomy or neediness, our coping skills or negativity. Attitude choice can sabotage or support organizational missions and decisions.

Our chosen attitude defines and reflects our inner character. This program explores how to develop and strengthen our coping skills for five common life adversities; discouragement, change, problems, fear, personal mistakes and failure
