Michael Rosenau

The court instructs you, gentlemen of the jury as follows.

If you believe and find from the evidence in the case that defendant and one Gus Ehlers voluntarily and of their own free will entered into a difficulty and fight in March 1887 and that the plaintiff interfered to ~~prevent~~ to prevent the difficulty and fight and to keep the combatants apart and that during the fight and while plaintiff was so engaged the defendant cut her cheek with a knife thereby inflicting a wound upon her then you verdict should be for plaintiff and in such case it is immaterial so far as plaintiff's right of recovery is concerned whether defendant unintentionally or intentionally inflicted the wound: but his intention may affect the amount of the recovery.

If he, under the circumstances enumerated above, intentionally inflicted the wound upon plaintiff then she cannot recover any more than a just compensation for the injuries she received. Hence if you find from the evidence that the defendant unintentionally inflicted the wound upon plaintiff under the above circumstances then you will in you need not allow her such damages as you believe from the evidence in the cause will justly compensate her for the injuries she received from such wound and in determining such damages you may take in to consideration the mental anguish ~~and~~ wounded feelings of Plaintiff and the character of the wound and the permanent nature of the injury inflicted upon her.

But on the other hand if you find from the evidence in the cause that the defendant intentionally inflicted the wound upon Plaintiff under the above circumstances, then in awarding damages to Plaintiff in addition the actual, compensatory damages as above defined you may allow her exemplary or punitive damages, Exemplary or punitive damages being awarded in cases of ^{or intentional} willful injuries by way of punishment of the offender and as an example to others who may be disposed to act in the same way. ~~If you allow~~ punitive or exemplary damages, such damages should be regulated by what you would deem right and proper under all the circumstances of the case as a suitable punishment for his act and as an example to other evil doers, ^{under the same circumstances.}

But in no case can the damages exceed five thousand dollars.

If you believe the defendant did not inflict the wound upon plaintiff then your verdict will be for defendant.
And the burden of proving that he did inflict the wound on plaintiff rests upon plaintiff and he is required to show this by a preponderance of the evidence.

You are the sole judges of the weight of the evidence and the credibility of the witnesses and if you believe any witness less weight by reason of partiality as to any material fact in the cause then you may disregard the whole or every part of the testimony of any such witness.
